Dear Ms. Wolfson,

I am writing to commend and thank your organization again for the direct, one-on-one services United Policyholders provided to Chevron in the aftermath of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, and for the ongoing support and service your organization provides. Our collaboration is a good example of a small but effective non-profit organization delivering valuable services and support to a large entity.

In the fall of 2005 your Executive Director, Amy Bach, responded immediately to our request for input and assistance. She participated in brainstorming sessions with our Human Resources team to identify how best to help our employees who had lost their homes pick up the pieces, get organized and navigate the rebuilding process. Amy developed regionally specific materials for three different states in a short period of time that we were able to immediately implement with our employees, and their communities to assist all in recovering from the devastation from the storms. Amy has been a pleasure to work with to achieve our goal of helping our employees, and the communities where we have company facilities. United Policyholders' well designed materials and pragmatic approach make a confusing process, recovering from a disaster, easy to understand.

Our employees truly appreciated the practical help they got from United Policyholders and the fact that the organization was looking out for their best interests.

We look forward to an ongoing partnership with United Policyholders aimed at helping our work force as well as the communities we serve to be better prepared to financially withstand and recover from natural disasters.

Sincerely,

Richard Sproul
